

Singapore Budget 2022 – Charting Our New Way Forward Together

Budget 2022 was delivered by Minister for Finance, Mr. Lawrence Wong, to the Singapore Parliament on 18 February 2022.

The common theme throughout Budget 2022 is the pressing need for the Government to raise more revenue to fund its growing spending needs, particularly, in healthcare and social programmes in the face of the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, a rapidly aging population, and its long-term climate goals of achieving net-zero emissions. As Government spending is expected to climb in the decade ahead and in view of the potentially negative fiscal impact of the OCED BEPS 2.0 project, adjustments to the Singapore tax system will be necessary to raise additional revenue in a sustainable fashion and move towards a more equitable revenue structure.

The key measures announced in Budget 2022 are as follows.

Fiscal measures

Goods and services tax

Goods and services tax ("GST") hike in 2023 and 2024	As announced in 2018, GST will be raised from the prevailing rate of 7% to 9% by 2025. Budget 2022 confirms that GST increase will be staggered over two years – to 8% (from 1 January 2023) and subsequently to 9% (from 1 January 2024).
Updating the GST treatment for travel arranging services (i.e., services comprising the arranging of international transport of passengers and the arranging of insurance related to such transportation, and services comprising the arranging of accommodation)	Budget 2022 provides a new basis for determining whether zero-rating applies to a supply of travel arranging services. From 1 January 2023, zero-rating will be based on the place where the contractual customer and the direct beneficiary of the service belong: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>» if the customer of the services belongs in Singapore, the travel arranging services will be standard-rated; or</li> <li>» if the customer of the services belongs outside Singapore and the direct beneficiary either belongs outside Singapore or is GST-registered in Singapore, the travel arranging services will be zero-rated.</li> </ul>

Analysis

As Singapore moves decisively towards a policy of living with COVID-19 and its pandemic-hit economy begins to turn a corner, Singapore is re-orientating its focus towards the two-pronged challenges of an ageing demographic and climate change.

Climate change and carbon tax

The climate change agenda featured very prominently in Budget 2022 with a significant 5-fold increase in carbon tax to S$25 per tonne of greenhouse gas emissions by 2024 and further increases to S$45 per tonne by 2026 and to potentially S$50 to S$80 per tonne in 2030. This is reflective of Singapore's ambitious and laudable net-zero climate commitments.

This will compel businesses in Singapore to take active steps in reducing their carbon footprint and energy requirements. It will also require manufacturing businesses in Singapore to reassess their markets and focus on markets which have regulations that are favourable to green products.

The Government will need to consider whether measures such as carbon border adjustment measures will be required in the longer term to protect domestic industries from imports that are produced without being subject to similar carbon taxes or green policies.

Fiscal measures

Budget 2022 also took necessary steps to expand Singapore's fiscal space by making the unprecedented move of announcing rate hikes in five tax types in Budget 2022: GST, individual income tax, residential property tax, carbon tax and ARF for luxury vehicles.

The revenue generated from the above measures should go some way towards addressing the long-term, existential challenges facing Singapore. While no ostensible wealth tax (such as an inheritance tax or a capital gains tax) was announced, some of the Budget 2022 measures reflect a growing commitment by the Government to shift the fiscal burden towards members of society with greater means to shoulder it. It remains to be seen if these efforts will help to further reduce the Gini coefficient in Singapore.

International tax

Eagerly anticipated but conspicuously absent from Budget 2022 are details of how Singapore intends to respond to the impending changes to international tax rules prompted by the OECD Pillars One and Two recommendations. As Singapore mulls its next steps and explores the feasibility of introducing a METR to top-up the effective tax rate of the largest MNE groups operating in Singapore to 15%, it is likely that further reform to the Singapore corporate tax system (including its incentive schemes) will be necessary for Singapore to remain BEPS-compliant.

As Singapore seeks a middle path between being a responsible member of the international community and retaining its shine as a gateway to Asia, businesses will do well to stay abreast of developments and consider how they could potentially be impacted by the anticipated structural shifts in the international tax system.

Singapore Global Enterprises

The Minister in Budget 2022 announced the creation of a new initiative called Singapore Global Enterprises to provide more customised assistance to support larger local enterprises to scale up and invest in overseas markets. Singapore companies should keep a close eye on this initiative and consider using the numerous existing support measures and corporate tax incentives when planning their expansion and internationalisation initiatives.

Final analysis

Budget 2022 achieves the delicate balance between providing for the future needs of Singapore and the global climate, and funding the increase costs of healthcare and other government programmes.

It sets the tone for businesses in terms of Singapore's ambitious climate commitments and the need to reduce their energy requirements and carbon footprint. However, it also signals continued commitment to investing in Singapore's population, upgrading skills and provide training while continuing to be attractive to foreign talent to support the needs of global businesses operating here.

The phasing in of the GST increase shows that the Government is cognisant that the nation has not fully recovered from the COVID-19 pandemic. It is noteworthy that the Minister has announced that for fiscal year 2022, the budget will remain expansionary to support the economy and is expected to be a deficit.

Overall, this is an ambitious but well calibrated budget.
